

Topic: Whether United States needs to reduce its military presence from the middle east region?

Reason for Decision

The negative side won the debate

The affirmative side put forth contentions centered around this move of the government, which will bring stability to the region and encourage nations to be self-reliant. Her argument emphasized the theory of utilitarianism, which says that the greater good benefits the greatest number of people.

However, the negative side effectively pointed out that the removal of US military presence from the Middle East region is not a solution as it will not bring any major positive changes for the US. The opposition effectively countered the argument of the opposition by highlighting the facts about the expansion of their counterparts, i.e., Russia and China, in that region, which will create problems in the upcoming years. The negative side aptly pointed out that the removal of its military force from the Middle East region will not help them much to be self-reliant and emphasized the vital role of the US trade deal, especially in oil and gas. The negative side addressed the consequences of the removal of the military from the region and talked about the geopolitical consequences of its existence.

Overall, it was the negative side's delivery and analysis of the topic and presentation of arguments and counterarguments that allowed them to take control of this debate.

Feedback of the Affirmative Side

Your content was good, and you also presented it in a well-structured manner. You have strengthened your arguments by providing data, reports, and an expert's view. Your analysis of the topic is also satisfactory. You are a confident speaker, but you need to focus on the delivery of your speech. During the debate, sometimes you take so many pauses, and sometimes your words are not clearly expressed. You also need to work on the cross-examination section; in this round, I did not find your answer satisfactory and to the point. Try to answer properly and to the point of whatever has been asked by the opponent. You can overcome this flaw by doing good research. Focus on the research part. All the best for upcoming events.

Feedback of the Negative side

Your performance was exceptional. Your organization of speech is up to the mark. Your in-depth research is the key to your performance. The way you answered your opponent's question showcases your ability of critical and innovative thinking, and that's one of the great skills of a good debater. Your delivery was also decent. But you need to go a little bit slow; you actually speak so fast. Work on it. Overall, it was a great performance.
