Stephanie - Would love to see more eye contact (I know it's hard while reading complex research)
Don't agree with your opponent unless you tilt their argument to support yours.
Good research and effort continuing your arguments. You improved as you went along.

Celine - Great loud clear voice. Good eye contact. Good job emphasizing your points. Varying your volume and emphasizing your key points with higher volume and emphasis was helpful. Your argument that monopolies encourage research was not compelling without further support. Excellent supply/demand arguments.

Susie - Liked your Harry Potter quote. Good job with research and citations. Would love to see a little bit more eye contact. Try to vary your volume!
Great job calling out opponent on prices never reaching equilibrium.

Morgan - Wonderful job making eye contact and emphasizing your points, with hand motions, changes in volume, etc. It made it much easier for a layperson judge to understand and give credit to your points. Loved the way you clearly transitioned from one point to the next. Great job calling out your opponent on facts (number of chest pain patients).

Luke Wu - Excellent arguments, speaking style needs more clarity and slower pacing. Good presence
A bit confusing arguments.

Jeffrey Liu - great arguments, excellent presence,
good rebuttals

Roy Kim - Great speaking style. Good crossfire

Andrew Lee - Good presence, gain more confidence and will do better.

NR - Similar to AR - focus more on your own arguments instead of theirs.
Liked the hook again.

CX - neg dominated CX again, Aff should beg back against that. Need to have ev. on hand. Aff just needs a better level of understanding of their own case.
When they ask Q's in CX, it should be an opportunity for you to give analysis and explain your case.

Summary / Final focus for both sides - crystallize the debate, explain which specific arguments win you the round and why. At the end of the debate, I felt that the impacts were lost. This could have been an Aff win if they extended their framing of only saving lives lost, as the Neg only extended their econ impacts.

Both sides:

1. do analysis of ev. Both teams just read cards, but didn't explain how they mattered, nor did they use cards in latter speeches. i.e. "prefer our X ev. because it takes price controls into account, while their Y ev. is purely speculation".
 2. impact comparison, turns / solves an. i.e. "solving econ means ppl have more $ to buy drugs".
- RFD: Voted NEG.

1. Aff case internal links had too many flaws that went conceded
2. Evidence violation

Need to explain what happens because public health prices are too high. Also, some ev/analysis of how import control would solve your impacts would help.

NC - Good delivery, liked the hook at the start. Depending on who your judge is, you could have less summary of ev and more arguments. Speech became somewhat repetitive because of that.

UK - don't let the Neg get all the questions, attack their case too. Asking for the stronger contention isn't really persuasive. For the Aff: just say that either contention can independently win you the round. Neg - asking if we can win the round if we disprove 2nd contention not really persuasive. Aff could just say both are important, or "it's not the Aff's job to tell you how to win".

AP - Don't need to spend that long restating opponent's arguments, make more arguments of your own. Know your own case, and leverage the evidence you've already read against theirs.
